

I must say I am disappointed at the recent outrage over the Super Bowl Halftime on the part of the FCC. You, and the NFL, are the worst kind of hypocrites this country offers. You go on a political quest to attack the human form, but revel in the ratings of a violent game which requires men to hurl their bodies at one another with violent force, causing many of them irreparable lifetime injuries. One player, during the game, performed one of the worst acts humans can do to each other, spitting in the face of his opponent.

Additionally, you and CBS, find it outstanding to show the human form on CSI or other highly rated crime shows, but lose your mind when a live human form somehow makes it through censorship. Any child of school age should have been in bed by the time of the display and any student older than youth age, should understand some concepts about the human form at this point in their lives. I do not condone the actions of Ms. Jackson, should they have been designed as some stunt, but if it is a "wardrobe error" as stated by the artists, you are off base on your "inquiry".

Investigate yourselves, CBS and the entire television industry, as programming similar to this has taken place for years, but for some reason, let's call it "ratings" you have turned the other cheek up to this point-keep doing it, at least you would then be consistent.

Finally, CBS, and you will never release the ratings of that halftime show as I am certain, given your past hypocrisy, that it is the highest rated show of its kind in the history of such games. Keep up the good work FCC - you hypocrites.
